

Folk art is studied and analyzed and its relationship with social reality is investigated. Works of folk art are considered to be the anonymous works created by traditional societies (folk) as well as products from modern cultures accepted by wider society (pop). The former include folk literature, music, dance and types of material culture, while the latter include modern literature, popular music, theatre and cinema.